

The military action in Fallujah appears NOT to be the much anticipated US offensive to take the town. It may be terrorist activity to improve position before the push takes place. The coalition has said it will give people a chance to leave Fallujah before the offensive.

There was also an explosion at a factory near Baghdad. The factory's purpose is unclear.

Cheney will deliver a speech at Westminster college in Fulton Missouri. This is where, on March 5, 1946, Winston Churchill delivered his historic remarks and coining the term "The Iron Curtain." It's doubtful Cheney will forget to mention that.

Ribbons or medals? Which did John Kerry throw away after he returned from Vietnam. This may become an issue for him today. His perceived disrespect for the military could be more damaging to the candidate than questions about his actions in uniform.

The President is in Minnesota, where he speaks of community colleges before returning to the White House. It's a day to make sure we take approximately equivalent live remarks from both candidates.

MONDAY UPDATE: THE BRITISH AUTHORITIES LOOKING INTO PRINCESS DIANA'S DEATH ARE TAKING A "CORONER'S' TOUR" OF PARIS. NOT A CORONARY TOUR.

Michael Jackson's change of attorney was probably inevitable. We'll await the release of his statement to see if it means anything aside from fewer Mark Geragos pressers.

This is the week Kobe Bryant's accuser has her own sexual past dissected. A judge must decide whether the accuser's amorous history is relevant to her accusations.

Closing arguments in the Jayson Williams trial begin. There have been several delays which now appear at an end.

We'll do some lives about the San Francisco District Attorney who refuses to seek the death penalty for a man accused of killing a police officer with an AK47. Law enforcement officials are displeased, to say the least.
