The terror alert continues to affect the way Americans live their lives as consumers, participants in public events and citizens. Let's explain. Fewers that while prudent precautions need to be taken, the disruption of the American way of life is in itself a terrorist goal and should not be conceded to our enemies.

The obvious and visible example is the no fly zone over two Disney theme parks in which la jeunesse will do live.

The tax cut passed last night by the Senate, though less than half what Bush originally proposed, contains some important victories for the administration. The DC crew will parse the bill and explain how it will fatten -- marginally -- our wallet.

Ever treacherous Iraq, there was gunplay between US troops and Iraqi attackers who paid the price.

The Yale explosion looks like less than first imagined. We'll do some lives and see if any new info comes out.
